

CityUHK-Learning Classroom – “Forward-looking Taxation Policies” by Prof. Raymond Wong (13 August 2025)

17 SEPTEMBER 2025

CityUHK is dedicated to fostering an inspirational, interactive, and innovative learning environment for secondary school students. To support this mission, we invite faculty and teaching staff to participate in the CityUHK Learning Classroom for Secondary School Students. On 13 August 2025, Prof. Raymond Wong conducted a fruitful session titled “Forward-Looking Taxation Policies”.

Prof. Wong, an Associate Professor in the Department of Accountancy, has previously led successful CityUHK Learning Classroom sessions. In this session, he focused on the impact of taxation policies on individuals' daily lives and explored the essential role of taxation in modern society. He discussed the importance of taxation globally and explained how governments raise and allocate public funds through taxation and related fiscal policies.

Prof. Wong encouraged students to critically analyze and express their views on the implications of existing and potential taxation policies. He guided them in exploring a range of social issues arising from the collection and spending of public funds.

The session was enriching, with active student engagement and thoughtful discussions. Through exploring various tax and public-related topics, students developed a stronger sense of civic responsibility. We hope this experience motivates students to further their learning beyond the classroom and acquire new knowledge in the CityUHK Learning Classroom.
