

CityUHK-Learning Classroom: “Forward-Looking Taxation Policies” by Prof. Raymond Wong (13 August 2025)

17 SEPTEMBER 2025

CityUHK is dedicated to fostering an inspirational, interactive, and innovative learning environment for secondary school students. To support this mission, we invited faculty and teaching staff to participate in the CityUHK Learning Classroom for Secondary School Students. On 13 August 2025, Prof. Raymond Wong conducted a fruitful session titled “Forward-Looking Taxation Policies.”

Prof. Wong, an Associate Professor in the Department of Accountancy, had previously led successful CityUHK Learning Classroom sessions. In this session, he focused on the impact of taxation policies on individuals’ daily lives and explored the essential role of taxation in modern society. He discussed the global importance of taxation and explained how governments raise and allocate public funds through taxation and related fiscal policies.

Prof. Wong encouraged the students to critically analyze and express their views on the implications of current and potential taxation policies. He guided them in exploring a range of social issues arising from the collection and spending of public funds.

The session was enriching, with active student engagement and thoughtful discussions. Through exploring various tax and public-related topics, the students developed a stronger sense of civic responsibility. We hope this experience will motivate the students to further their learning beyond the classroom and acquire new knowledge in the CityUHK Learning Classroom.
